Editor's Note

This year, the Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice explored some of the vast issues facing our society through scholarship and symposium. The range of scholarship that we published is indicative of just how many areas of the law, issues in society, and groups within society are still fighting for justice. Through publication and discussion, we hope to play a part in shedding more light onto these issues.

This year we took an in-depth look at policing in America through our symposium. We are publishing articles addressing free speech, sex trafficking, statutory interpretation as it applies to Indian nations, and how to change legal education to encourage public service. These are just a few of the issues facing our society, our country, and our profession. We hope that these efforts add to the discussion and encourage more dialogue.

This publication would not be possible without great effort. I would like to thank the Editorial Board, Staff Writers, and especially Lisa Gearheart for their tireless efforts. Additionally, the Journal is grateful for the support of Professor Margaret Hu, Professor Victoria Sahani, and Dean Paul Rollins.

WASHINGTON AND LEE JOURNAL OF CIVIL RIGHTS AND SOCIAL JUSTICE

Mission Statement: The Washington and Lee Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice (JCRSJ) is a biannual scholarly publication focusing on legal issues that affect historically under represented classes of persons. The Journal has published articles covering a wide variety of subject matter including real estate, education, healthcare, family, environment, public welfare, and international rights. The Journal's mission is to explore the intersection of majority and minority culture through discrete legal issues. To that end, the Journal seeks to provide a space for scholars of all persuasions to expand and develop a theoretical, critical, and socially relevant dialogue with the legal community. The articles published by the Journal are building blocks for understanding the issues that face our society today.

Statement of Ownership and Management: The Washington and Lee Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice (ISSN 1942-5732) is owned by Washington and Lee University and is published twice a year by students of Washington and Lee University School of Law. The Journal is printed at Joe Christensen, Inc., 1540 Adams Street, Lincoln, Nebraska 68521 and is entered as a periodical with postage paid at post offices in Lexington, Virginia, and Lincoln, Nebraska.
