This Prefatory is brought to you for free and open access by the Washington and Lee Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice at Washington and Lee University School of Law Scholarly Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Washington and Lee Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice by an authorized editor of Washington and Lee University School of Law Scholarly Commons. For more information, please contact christensena@wlu.edu.

The Journal of Civil Rights and Social Justice at Washington and Lee School of Law proudly supports scholarship that values all perspectives. The Journal values and explores the intersection of majority and minority cultures through a range of legal issues, empowering the voices of disenfranchised communities. We are confident that our contribution to scholarship in this field makes a difference.

The articles featured in this edition reflect how civil rights and social justice issues infiltrate a range of disciplines. We are excited to have the opportunity to feature articles from scholars passionate about legal issues that affect historically underrepresented classes of people.

This issue also includes four student notes written by members of the 2017-2018 Editorial Board. One of these notes, Out of the “Serbonian Bog” Surrounding Government Acquisition of Third-Party Cell Site Location Information: “Get a Warrant” won the esteemed Louise A. Halper Award for Best Student Note.

I would personally like to thank the 2017-2018 Editorial Board for its dedication and hard work in service to the Journal. In addition, the Journal is immensely grateful for the support of Lisa Gearheart, Dean Mason, Professor Shaughnessy, and all those who value the Journal and its mission.
